COLD WEATHER/HOT MOUTH

DUCKING THE COLD

Wild Duck Café heats things up BY ANDY VALENTINE

It may have been the driest winter on record for a while there, but that doesn't mean it's warm. Au contraire: This year's mercurial weather has meant that a lot of the time it's still nail-bitingly, teeth chatteringly cold outside, and humans need more than fro-yo to get through a lunch break.

Enter Wild Duck Café, the East Campus sports restaurant keeping it chill when it comes to warmth.

Some may know the joint by its former name — the Villard St. Café — and the management team remains, but Wild Duck has a new menu of mid-range prices and delicious ways to body slam the cold right out of your bones.

"There's just no comparison to fresh ground beef when you're eating a gourmet hamburger," says Bob Jensen, Wild Duck's jovial and personable manager, as I sink my teeth into a spicy jalapeño burger, piled high with cream cheese and whole jalapeño peppers. "And those onions came out right on the money." Here Jensen points to the unique creation that is "Haystack Onions," a thin-sliced take on onion rings that arrives looking more like delicious wisps of angel's hair than anything else.

That's the name of the game, seemingly, at Wild Duck; it's all the comforts of sports-bar food (wings, soup, burgers, etc.) with a twist on each item that makes it seem new. For example, the wing appetizer comes with a choice of spicy sauces beyond the generic buffalo (Vietnamese garlic sauce, et al.), and the beer cheese soup is one of the sharpest, most beer-tasting soups in the city. Add sweet potato tots and you'll be wearing an internal food blanket in no time.

Wild Duck also has a catering service that's been in business since 1996, and this acts as a lucrative side-project as well as a ready supplier for the restaurant's ingredients. With a solid base like this, it's unsurprising that the folks at Wild Duck have fancy plans for the future: Among them will be the installation of a 12-foot Chef's Table, an exclusive seating area allowing patrons a front row seat while the chef prepares their food.

"The table is going to be made of Koa," Jensen says, divulging a great passion for Oregon sports as he launches into a story involving the formation of his friendship with Max Unger's grandfather in Hawaii (Unger is a former offensive tackle for UO's football team). "We're going to make an event called Unger for Hunger."

While the event is not projected to come to fruition until next fall, the concept itself is a great idea: With Max Unger's influence, Wild Duck Café hopes to create a benefit — including a ukulele auction and dinner — that will aid Food for Lane County.

Beating the cold may seem a daunting task, especially considering the fact that the heavens have finally opened, but when you've got choices like these, who cares? It won't take long before your belly is stoked and your body is bathed in warmth. ■

SUSHI YA-YA YUM

Raw fish with bite BY TED SHORACK

If you've got a hankering for some spicy tuna or pork and don't mind a little forehead sweat, Sushi Ya has peppery appetizers, signature sushi rolls and a mean bento to satisfy the need.

The downtown Eugene restaurant opened in 2008, and owner Yunhee Song has utilized the limited space by elegantly arranging a paper globe-lit dining room and a short-but-sweet bar setup. On the first floor of the Tiffany Building, at the intersection of Willamette and East 8th, Sushi Ya is a short walk from a weekday job or weekend bar blitz downtown.

The restaurant appears unassuming at first glance, but the bar — with only six seats and a small glass case for viewing — has a wonderful oval granite backdrop with a large tin fish and vibrant collection of sake on display. To the right hangs a flat screen TV for those interested in catching a game with a few sake bombs.

But before indulging in some rice wine, start your meal with a bang. The appetizer at the top of Ya's list, the "Firecracker," comes on a bed of shredded cabbage as four halves of tempura-fried jalapeños stuffed with spicy tuna, cream cheese, unagi sauce and a drizzle of spicy mayo for each. The overwhelming kick is absent, with no sign of the pepper's seeds, but the presentation and combination of flavors make up for it.

Lovers of spicy rolls should try the reasonably priced spicy tuna or spicy yellowtail rolls. Served on a beautiful square plate, the two make a great combination for 11 bucks. If you're willing to spend a little more for a tingling tongue, the Hawaii volcano roll and "TNT" crunchy sushi roll are a good start. Both start off with spicy tuna and build up with masago (roe from a small fish), unagi or crab and are priced at $9.50 and $11.50.

Another favorite is the "GO DUCKS" roll with albacore, avocado, green onion and topped with a creamy spicy sauce. This past football season, the restaurant treated Duck fans and others to 30 percent off all food on winning game days.

Sushi Ya's head chef, Paul Hong, says he is especially proud of their spicy pork bento, which comes as a combo with a California roll, potstickers, kobachi and miso soup. The generous portion costs $10.95 and can tend to that desire for the spicier side of life.

The restaurant draws a crowd on weekend nights, owner Song says, with its midnight closing time. She also says the 30-percent happy hour between 3 and 5 pm is a great time to stop by, with a dozen kinds of cold sake, seven of hot sake, wine, beer and, well, what else do you really need?

Ya's alluring street-side booths, with upright bamboo racks around the perimeter, make it a cozy place to sit for dinner and people-watching while enjoying a full range of the menu's options. ■

SO NICE THE SPICE

Mezza Luna's classic peppery pizza is the perfect pie BY RICK LEVIN

It's not even on the menu anymore. But if you study the selection carefully, you'll run across a rider stating that certain Mezza Luna classics are still available, despite their absence from the larger list of featured pizzas.

On paper, Mezza's fine-print classics read like a line-up of the FBI's Most Wanted mobsters: Greekish, Fun-Guy Trio, Savory Garden, Spin Chicken, Nice Spice.

Nice Spice. That's the ticket.

Like one of those legendary, perhaps not-quite-up-to-health-statute pots of kimchi cooking away on the roof of some Chinatown café in San Francisco, available only to certain customers privy to the secret wink-and-nod, Mezza Luna's "Nice Spice" pizza remains available despite being dropped from the big list.

It's a crazy omission, because that pizza is heavenly. Crazy, but at the same time fitting — it adds to the lore and provides a certain zing for devotees who get the chance to "order off the menu" — like insider baseball for the culinary jet set.

Of course, the Nice Spice is not some esoteric, expensive dish available only to an exclusive and elite clientele; this pizza's stature remains demotic and completely available to all, so long as you know to ask for it.

Ask for it. It is the best slice of pie made by the finest pizzeria in town.

Mezza Luna co-owner Sandy Little says the Nice Spice was among the first pies they put on the menu when the popular pizza joint first opened (Mezza Luna placed second among pizzerias in EW's recent Best of Eugene readers poll).

"It's one of our classics," Little says, noting that currently the restaurant is celebrating its seventh anniversary. "It's really exciting," he says, adding that, even though the Nice Spice isn't featured, "We make two or three of them a day, easily. It's still on our website."

Deceptively simple, the ingredients in Nice Spice include two meat toppings — spiced pepperoni and spiced salami — along with mushrooms, mozzarella, tomato sauce and pepperoncini peppers. This last, the peppers, is crucial to the pizza's kick, but what really defines this recipe is the delicate balance among meat, cheese and spice.

"The whole combo with the mushrooms — we were trying to balance things out," Little explains. "The mushroom, a more neutral flavor, adds a sort of bridge. The spiced-meat part of it was pretty straightforward. That's one of the those things that can go with a lot of things."

This is a pizza lover's pizza, a pie that deconstructs and reinvents the basic splendor of an uncomplicated slice. The perfect equilibrium of Nice Spice is achieved through a combination of daring and know-how; it is the introduction of a common fungus that brings the zing of the pepperoncinis down just a notch, to the ensalivating level of temperate tanginess.

Little says that, along with the Nice Spice, Mezza Luna features a roasted habanero tomato sauce on several of its combinations, as well as a variety of pies topped with jalapeño peppers. He says that, recently, he's even asked the pizza makers to "tone it down a bit" on the spice. Still, the habanero sauce gives you that "good, sinus-clearing, narcotic effect" that can lead to the "all-body glow" of immaculately maintained spiciness, Little says.

NICE SPICE PIZZA

In an era when certain meddlesome do-gooders feel compelled to pile their pizza with ingredients like walnuts, corn, sprouts, barbecue sauce or taco fixings, Mezza Luna's Nice Spice stands both as a corrective and a reminder that pizza is just pizza — not in the sense that a game is just a game, but in the sense that jazz is just jazz: Don't blow dolphin farts out of your alto sax and call it Coltrane.

When you slap chicken on a pizza and stuff the crust with cheese, you are violating one of cooking's most sacred orthodoxies, which is to keep it simple — nice and simple. Mezza Luna's Nice Spice, a pie that takes basic to the realm of brilliance, is the embodiment of that age-old maxim. ■

GET SAUCED

Hot Mama's Kamikaze Challenge scalds Eugene BY DANTE ZUÑIGA-WEST

Since the dawn of time, food has led humans to pursue the extreme. The first person to look at a woolly mammoth and suggest attacking it with sticks and sharp stones in the interest of cuisine was most likely a prehistoric radical. Likewise, whoever thought up the idea of peeling and then deep-frying bull testicles was probably a bit out there. Maybe not, who knows?

And who cares? Fringe decisions plus food is far safer than poor choices plus alcohol — arguably as entertaining — and spicy foods provide the perfect platform to go all out.

The Hot Mama's Wings Kamikaze Challenge isn't a good idea for the average experimental hot-sauce amateur. It's not a good decision for people who fear commitment. For this sort of thing, you need to be an extreme-spice enthusiast. You need to temporarily disregard your stomach. You have to go upstairs in your mind or visit Mr. Pain's neighborhood, on the toilet, possibly in the fetal position. This is about spicy food, but it's also about volition.

EW intern Andrew Hitz is a man of action. A Eugenean by way of Alaska, Hitz is accustomed to extreme temperatures and a living environment where local wildlife will crash through your front yard to eat your pets. He is also (by choice) vigilantly omnivorous, unafraid of plunging into the foulest waste receptacles the city of Eugene has to offer in search of his next meal.

Hitz will eat things that you will not. Where some see poison, he sees providence. What you call derelict, he calls dinner.

One can only imagine the type of resilience Hitz's digestive system has achieved. It is no small wonder he rose to the occasion.

No one knows what originally inspired the folks at Hot Mama's to challenge the community in such piquant fashion. There are rumors that Portland's cult-esque hot wings joint Fire on the Mountain inspired Hot Mama's owner Michael Marzano to take things one step further.

Fire on the Mountain's event, known as the El Jefe Challenge!, requires a contestant to eat 15 wings in five minutes. The brave soul is not permitted to use ranch or bleu cheese dip, can use only one napkin and must sign a waiver before going through with the ordeal.

The Kamikaze Challenge at Hot Mama's Wings doesn't require a contestant to eat 15 wings, only nine. But these wings — slathered in Hot Mama's signature kamikaze sauce — must be eaten in six minutes, there can be nothing to aide in the passing of said wings, and after achieving consumption within the allotted time frame of six minutes, the contestant is not permitted to imbibe any form of liquid for another six minutes.

If you can survive that, you win a T-shirt and bragging rights. Many have tried, and many have failed; Hitz excelled.

He was prepared, mentally and physically. The kamikaze sauce was so hot it burned the nostrils when inhaled at close range, but Hitz had no fear. Surrounded by cheering supporters, he tore into the wings as the stopwatch snapped on.

Hitz's approach was one of ravenous determination, devouring wing after wing with aggression and poise. Any chicken in the room would have been utterly terrified.

For those brief and heroic moments, Hitz transcended himself. He was Jordan dunking, Tyson in his prime, Prefontaine racing down the Hayward Field track — smashing record books. Hitz didn't need six minutes. He finished the nine wings in two minutes and 48 seconds. The room fell silent.

What happened next was a show of strength. It was with sheer grit that Hitz survived the subsequent six minutes. With kefir yoghurt drink at the ready, he stared off into the carpet, attempting to go to a happy place inside. The vinegar, salt, tomato paste, butter, onion, garlic, habanero peppers, chicken and cayenne pepper that is mixed with a special extra-spicy ingredient (that Hot Mama's Wings refuses to disclose) swirled and congealed within Hitz. He was sauced, and the fiery sensation within him was threatening to take over.

Aside from breathing deeply and cursing the editor who'd facilitated this endeavor, Hitz burned in silence. Six minutes later the stopwatch snapped off. Hitz drank his kefir to the sound of applause.

It took roughly two and a half hours for Hitz's internal homeostasis to reconstitute. Approximately five hours later he phoned his editor from somewhere on 13th Avenue and demanded transportation via car, after growling that he'd discovered it difficult to bike back home, given the state of indigestion he'd found himself in. His battle with spices of the highest order had concluded, but the standard he set continues on.

So how hot do you want it, Eugene? Do you think you have what it takes to step up to the plate?

Everyone has his own personal threshold for spice, ranging from mild to volcanic. Should you need to find a testing ground for that threshold, it appears the table has been set.

"Some people quit after one wing," Marzano says of the challenge. "Some people freak out. Some people come in, eat all of them and don't have any problems with it."

"It's all based on the person and how hot they like things."

Good luck. ■

MOM'S PIES

The real Mom's Pies, at the mall BY CAITLIN MCKIMMY

Many Eugeneans nostalgically recall stopping at Mom's Pies to warm up after a day in the mountains — the family-run restaurant on Highway 126 in Vida served fresh, hot pie to travelers and locals for many years.

Now, after an almost 10-year hiatus, Mom's Pie's is once more concocting pies according to its time-honored recipe. Instead of making their way up the McKenzie, however, pie-seekers need not search beyond the food court at Valley River Center.

The owner of Mom's Pies, Lou Sangermano, says he is excited to get his family business up and running again. "We began selling pies in the 1940s," he says. "I bought the restaurant from my dad in 1999."

According to Sangermano, Mom's Pies closed its Vida location in 2003 because business was too seasonal. "It was always in the back of my mind that I wanted to re-open at some point," he says, "and now seems like the right time."

Valley River Center might seem like a counterintuitive location for a homegrown family business, but Sangermano thought the mall would be a good place for Mom's Pies to "get a lot of exposure with all sorts of people." He has been passing out free samples to shoppers, and says he hopes to re-establish the business as a local staple. "People are so surprised — they've been asking me if we're the real Mom's Pies," Sangermano says. "I tell them yes and have them taste for themselves."

Indeed, Mom's Pies continues to use the exact same recipe that was served on the side of the highway in the '40s. The restaurant offers a panoply of pies, from strawberry rhubarb to apple and berry medley. "I try to keep everything fresh and simple," Sangermano says. "One of the great things about having a pie business in the Willamette Valley is that we can use awesome local ingredients."

Bertha Nyseth used to bake for Mom's Pies at the old location, and she continues to produce traditional, artful pies in the mall. All of the pies are vegan, and Sangermano hopes to soon offer a gluten-free option.

Beyond fresh pie, Mom's Pies offers soups, sandwiches and coffee so that customers can enjoy a wholesome, all-American meal after a hard day of shopping. Frozen pies are also available for purchase to be baked at home. And, of course, customers can choose to eat their piping hot pies à la mode.

It's surprising, but true: Now you can rekindle fond memories of the McKenzie River Highway at a place wedged between Arby's and Panda Express. Mom's Pies' traditional sensibilities may seem out of place among chain restaurants in the Valley River food court, but a warm slice of pie just might be the perfect antidote to the mall's bright lights and sterile consumerism. ■

Mom's Pies is located at Valley River Center, 868-0904.

ON THE BEATEN PATH

The Dexter Lake Club revives its history BY SHANNON FINNELL

To everyone who ever had a crush on Patrick Swazye or giggled uproariously at the raunchy antics of Animal House, the American roadhouse is a familiar institution. Whether it's the plates heaped with down-home cooking in a comfy diner, the local lore or the energetic bar scene where your waitress jumps aside for a few seconds of dancing once the drinks are served, a roadhouse can offer a lot — and the Dexter Lake Club does all of that.

The club cemented its place in Lane County history when scenes from National Lampoon's Animal House — when Delta Tau Chi met up with the band that played its toga party — were filmed there. Since then, it's changed hands a number of times and been everything from a bar to a craft store. When in late 2011 it fell into the hands of owners Gregg and Shannon Stewart, they had a lot of work to do.

The 1949-built structure needed a new bar, a complete renovation of the café and some exterior work that the Stewarts have planned for drier weather. “Not only did we come in and make (the design) cleaner,” Stewart says, “but we thickened up the vibe of the whole place.”

The bar side now projects quite the vibe, with the zebra-print wall and Animal House neon sign. The staff encourages visitors to take pictures in the patterned booth the Stewarts replicated from the movie.

Gregg Stewart says that his wife, Shannon, developed the menu, based mostly in home-cooked American comfort food. “My wife’s approach was to do our own mashed potatoes, soups, bases and stocks,” Stewart says, the same way diner food was cooked when less pre-made fare was available. Burgers have been a popular option so far, as have the sweet potato fries and pizzas.

Stewart is busy developing a roadhouse music scene for the bar, including guest bands, a house band he plays in with some old friends, and jam and songwriters’ nights. “It’s country; it’s rockabilly; it’s ‘70s classic rock and blues,” he says, describing the spot-on music mix of a roadhouse. ■

CHAIN REACTION

Portland-based Little Big Burger brings hot ketchup to Eugene

BY SARAH DECKER & SHANNON FINNELL

Little Big Burger, which opened its doors in Portland in 2010, has finally descended upon Eugene. With its wallet-friendly prices and loyalty to local and sustainable foods, it's no wonder LBB won a cult following in Portland, and its location right next to Knight Arena will add to the Eugene eatery's appeal for sportsgoers.

LBB uses all-natural Cascade beef in its burgers, sea salt and truffle oil on its fries, and buys local veggie burger patties from Marie at Chez Gourmet. The menu is basic, with four food items, soda and floats, though its beer menu does pack a more complex punch. We counted 29 options — but that was after a couple bottles, so someone might need to recount for us. Hopefully they'll add some local brews like Ninkasi or Oakshire to the menu.

All of this creates a fabulous dining experience, but the real cherry on the sundae is the ketchup on the french fries. LBB uses — and sells — its own variation on ketchup. And this ketchup has a kick. Veering away from the corn syrup industry standard, LBB serves up Camden's Catsup, which gets its sweetness from honey and its kick from Sriracha. If the tasty, filling food isn't reason enough to stop in this joint, this ketchup is a powerful motivator.

Co-owner Katie Poppe told EW that ketchup for purchase in Eugene should be available right around publication of this issue. ■

THAT'S A SPICY TRUFFLE!

Chilies in your chocolate and other winter warmers BY SARAH DECKER

Winter is upon us. The air is crisp, the breeze is brisk and the days are short. This season inspires in me a desire for warmth in any way possible, right down to the foods I eat. And where temperature leaves off, spices kick in. I want spicy and flavorful, as well as something to bring the heat.

Right off the bat I'll admit I'm more or less a wimp when it comes to spices. I like my Thai food mild and have been known to order medium salsa when I'm feeling particularly adventurous, but that's about as far as I go. Because of this, I have been amazed lately to find that many of my favorite haunts for chocolate — a food I consume with voracious regularity — have started to add a wide variety of spices in their sweets. Naturally, I had to give this a try.

My first spiced chocolates came in the form of Euphoria Chocolate's spiced truffles. I bought these in a three pack because, as everyone knows, one truffle is never enough. The candies themselves are divine, and the spices (cinnamon, paprika, chipotle and cardamom) are evident, but I would hardly label them "spicy." The flavor is rich and warm and a definite welcome sensation on a cold winter's day.

Next I hit up Divine Cupcake for a double dose of spiciness. The first cupcake I sampled, the Thai Me Up, was incredible. Instead of being set in chocolate, the cupcake itself is a peanut curry cake topped off with peanut buttercream frosting and sprinkled with ground chili peppers. Again, the overall taste of the cake is less heat, more spice. But the ground chili peppers resting atop add just the right kick.

DIVINE CUPCAKE'S THAI ME UP

go down real smooth and your stash will be gone before long.

Also at Sweet Life, for the time being, is Red Hot Chocolate Cheesecake — the February dessert of the month. Sweet Life certainly doesn't hold back on the spice. The cheesecake was by far the spiciest thing I'd bitten into during this survey and has proven to be my favorite of the bunch. Its heat comes from cayenne and cinnamon, but the kick is undeniable.

In the end, I've learned two things: "Spicy," in this case, can mean either loaded with the flavor of spices, or downright hot. And spiciness mixed with chocolate, although foreign and strange sounding, can bring you some of the best desserts you'll eat this long winter season. If chocolate isn't your bag, the Thai Me Up is the way to go. But if you're a chocoholic like me, you'll find that the chocolate mellows the chilies just enough to make them tolerable, though their kick provides a keen balance to the smooth and sweet cocoa.

If you're looking for a way to warm up your winter, indulge in all the culinary delights this season has to offer. And don't skip the dessert. ■

DANGER! HIGH SPICE-AGE!

Inside the deceptively dangerous chili pepper BY SHANNON FINNELL

No food is quite as synonymous with “hot” as chili peppers. Whether adding a slight kick to a bland dish or providing the core of the spicy food lover’s diet, chili peppers can bring a range of flavors to a dish — and the spiciness factor is actually a matter of anatomy.

Capsaicin, the chemical that makes chili peppers hot, is distributed unevenly throughout the fruit. Nellie Oehler, who oversees master food preparers for OSU’s Lane County Extension, says that most people ditch the most spicy, capsaicin-ated parts of the pepper.

“People usually cut them open and take out the seeds and the veins, but I know people that like the seeds because there’s more heat in the seeds,” Oehler says. “It depends on what you like.”

Even those who like it hot need to be careful with the genus Capsicum, though, because capsaicin is present at some level throughout the fruit, even on the outside of the skin. Oehler recommends using a plastic produce bag to pick them up at the grocery store, because the capsaicin residue can rub off on skin. “You pick them up out of the bins at the store, and then you wipe your kid’s eye — that can be really dangerous,” she says.

Oehler sees a lot of people overestimating their capacity to cope with chili pepper fumes and suffering the consequences. “People are macho: ‘I can do this, and I don’t need gloves, and I don’t need a mask or whatever,’ and they end up in the emergency room.”

The emergency room?

“Oh yeah,” she says. “We get two or three calls every summer that somebody burned themselves with peppers, especially those little habaneros and those really hot Chinese cherries, those can really cause burns.”

Chili peppers can be rated on a scale of zero to almost 1.5 million Scoville heat units (SHU), which measures capsaicin. Bell peppers rate a wimpy zero; the latest world record holder — and it’s upped all the time — is the Trinidad Scorpion Butch T pepper at 1,463,700 SHU.

The danger of chili peppers doesn’t end with capsaicin. Preserving hot peppers by pickling them is a popular way to save summer spice through the winter, but peppers are a low-acid food, which makes them more vulnerable to botulism. They can still be handled safely, though.

“Don’t can them without vinegar if you’re making a pickled pepper,” Oehler advises, “or if you use a pressure canner, follow the directions for a low-acid food like green beans.”

Drying peppers for the winter is safer, and one of the easiest ways to use peppers because no pre-drying treatment is required. Oehler says that just stringing them across the garage is a perfectly decent drying method.

“They freeze pretty well depending on what you want to do with them, but they’re not going to stay crisp as if they were fresh,” Oehler says. That diminishes what peppers can do for the texture of salads, but as flavoring they’re untainted. Before storing this way, blanching peppers slows enzyme activity to keep them closer to their fresh flavor and texture.

Oehler recommends freezing and drying to penny-pinchers who want to avoid sky-high pepper prices in the winter. To save even more money, she says she’s had a pretty easy time growing them in the Willamette Valley climate, even in flower pots. ■

Tilapia with Harisa

FROM CAFÉ SORIAH

1 tilapia fillet
2 tbsps butter
1/8 tsp black pepper
1/2 tsp minced garlic
1/4 cup pomegranate molasses
1/2 tsp Dijon mustard

Thinly coat both sides of a tilapia fillet with harisa; since harisa is spicy, coat to your discretion. Grill, bake (400 F) or pan sear for 3 minutes on each side, depending on the thickness of the fillet.

In a flash pan melt the butter, then add black pepper, minced garlic, pomegranate molasses and Dijon mustard. Stir well, keep on heat till it bubbles, then dredge the fish on both sides in this sauce.

Harisa:

6 oz. dried red chili peppers, whole
1 tbsp toasted mustard seeds
1/4 cup olive oil
1 tbsp red wine vinegar
1 tbsp toasted coriander seeds
1 tbsp cumin seeds

Boil chili peppers in water until soft, drain water and put in food processor with toasted mustard seeds, toasted coriander seeds, cumin seeds, olive oil and red wine vinegar. Process until smooth paste.

CHOW! Restaurant Listings

Island Flare Hot Sauce

FROM PAPA'S SOUL FOOD KITCHEN

makes about 4 cups

2 tbsps pickling spice
1 cup apple cider vinegar
6-20 habaneros diced (how hot do you want it?)
1 1/2 quarts pineapple juice
2 cups apple juice

In a heavy bottom pot on medium-high heat, toast pickling spice until it starts poppin' and dancin'. Add vinegar, stand back and wait for the boiling to settle down. Add the habaneros and boil for a minute. Add the pineapple and apple juice. Boil long enough to reduce by half, strain out the solids through a fine sieve, cool and enjoy.

Papa's Soul Food Kitchen recommends Island Flare on fish, red beans and rice, and coleslaw. Cliff invites you to stop by the restaurant and let Papa's know what foods you enjoy this deep, aromatic flavored hot sauce with.

Smokey Habanero Hot Sauce

FROM LA OFICINA

Makes about 2 cups

5 cloves garlic, unpeeled
1/2 cup peeled, roughly chopped carrot (one medium sized carrot)
1/2 cup roughly chopped white onion (about half of a small onion)
12 medium (about 5 ounces) orange habanero chiles, stemmed
3 chipotle peppers in adobo sauce (plus about 4 tbsps of the sauce from the can or more if you want it smokier)
1 cup apple cider vinegar
1 cup water
about 2 tsps salt
1/4 tsp sugar

Roast the garlic in a skillet over medium heat, turning regularly until soft and blackened in spots, 10 to 15 minutes. Cool and peel.

In a small saucepan, combine the carrot, onion and habanero chiles with the vinegar and one cup water. Partially cover and simmer over medium-low heat until the carrots are thoroughly tender, about 10 minutes. Pour into a blender jar, add the roasted garlic, chipotle chiles and the adobo sauce, salt and sugar. Blend until smooth. Thin with a little additional water if hot sauce is too thick. Taste and season with additional salt if necessary.

Pour into jars or bottles and store in the refrigerator until you're ready to add some fire to a dish.
